James Encourages Civic Engagement

Dwight James

Division of Social Sciences with James and President Richardson

Mr. Dwight James, executive director of the S.C. NAACP, presented at Thursday's Social Science Assembly. Applauding Morris College and other HBCUs for the role they play in educating African-Americans, James gave a very informative presentation regarding the purpose and objectives of the NAACP as well as a strong charge for students to become involved and engaged in the community and in the political process. He described the organization as "A vehicle for change since 1909." He added, "Individuals must move the vehicle forward and hold America responsible." He spoke specifically of the challenging issues facing South Carolinians and other Americans, including the right to vote "and participate in society."

Reflecting on the current election process, he shared that too few participate and "shy away from politics". He said this impacts how we live and what we pay for taxes and education. James urged students to become participatory in the election process and the NAACP. He advised, "As our right to vote is being challenged so is our quality of life."

James urged students, "Let your voice be heard" by becoming active in the decision making process through absentee voting or registering to vote in Sumter (college ID and Morris College CPO box must be presented for the latter if not a resident of Sumter).

He challenged students to assist in getting their peers to the polls and concluded by informing students they have a major role to play in making America better. "We need you on boards of educations and in city economic development. We want youth involved. We want your leadership and your input. The NAACP has a place for you on our boards."

After his presentation James answered questions from the audience regarding the NAACP and voter registration.

Following the questions, President Richardson gave closing remarks, complimenting the Division of Social Sciences for a meaningful program. He also thanked Mr. James for providing a wealth of information and for the outstanding work he does with the NAACP. He added, "Students need to become more familiar with the work of the NAACP."
