Call Me Mister Luncheon “World Changers”

The Call Me MISTER Summer Leadership Institute has become a key piece of the Call Me Mister program experience for students over the years. Students and site coordinators from every participating institution came together to hear guest speakers, network with one another and network with one another and discuss key issues that affect African American students in education.

The investiture ceremony takes place during the institute, where graduating MISTERS receive their signature black blazer. The significance is beyond an article of clothing. It is a major milestone. It is the peak of a mountain ascended before a MISTER moves on to fulfill their commitment to teach in the public school. Morris College’s very own Mr. John Frinks received his blazer during this year’s investiture ceremony.

Call Me MISTER works to increase the pool of available teachers from more diverse backgrounds, particularly among the lowest-performing elementary schools. What started as a single program at Clemson University is now at twenty-five participating institutions in nine states.
