Senior Class President, Samone Hooper, gave a presidential address at the Senior Class Assembly on Thursday morning.

Focusing on the theme, "Stepping up before we step out," Hooper asked the question, "How are you stepping up?" Hooper challenged her peers to pursue personal excellence during their college years in preparation for success in the world. She presented three keys and seven steps for attaining personal excellence.

Explaining that there will be obstacles to overcome, she said the first key is having the will to win; this includes allowing naysayers to inspire you to achieve. The second key, have a desire to succeed: take advantage of existing opportunities and responsibilities. She said, "This includes making smart choices with your time. Your attitude will determine your altitude."

The last key she presented was, "The urge to reach your full potential!" This key requires seven steps: 1. Reflect on your life. 2. Become an optimist. 3. Set goals. 4. Define who your role models are. 5. Be grateful. 6. Become a life-long learner. 7. Embrace change.

In addition to alerting the underclassmen that they have even more time and opportunity to accomplish their goals, she directed the seniors to perform a self-examination. She commanded the campus community, "Stay focused, stay driven, and never give up. Just remember to keep your eyes on the prize."

Delighted with Hooper's address, President Richardson stated, "In all my 38 years, this is one of the best senior addresses I've heard. It was well planned, well thought out, and well delivered." President Richardson also complimented all of the assembly participants on their outstanding and well prepared performance.

The Honorable Mayor Joseph T. McElveen, Jr.
